

Does knowing your 'lung age' give you anything useful? New ways of thinking about disease risk.

Robert Walton for Evidently Cochrane 12 April 2019

References

Clair C, Mueller Y, Livingstone-Banks J, Burnand B, Camain JY, Cornuz J, Rège-Walther M, Selby K, Bize R. Biomedical risk assessment as an aid for smoking cessation. Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews 2019, Issue 3. Art. No.: CD004705. DOI: 10.1002/14651858.CD004705.pub5.

<https://www.cochranelibrary.com/cdsr/doi/10.1002/14651858.CD004705.pub5/full>

Drummond MB, Astemborski J, Lambert AA, et al. A randomized study of contingency management and spirometric lung age for motivating smoking cessation among injection drug users. BMC Public Health 2014;14:761. doi: 10.1186/1471-2458-14-761 [published Online First: 2014/07/28]

McCartney M. "More or less 7/9/18 – heart age". Margaret McCartney's blog, 7th September 2018. Web. 12th April 2019. <http://margaretmccartney.com/2018/09/07/more-or-less-7918-heart-age/>

Parkes G, Greenhalgh T, Griffin M, et al. Effect on smoking quit rate of telling patients their lung age: the Step2quit randomised controlled trial. BMJ 2008;336(7644):598-600. doi: 10.1136/bmj.39503.582396.25 [published Online First: 2008/03/06]

Spiegelhalter D. How old are you, really? Communicating chronic risk through 'effective age' of your body and organs. BMC Med Inform Decis Mak 2016;16:104. doi: 10.1186/s12911-016-0342-z [published Online First: 2016/08/05]